

Multicultural Postdoctoral Fellowship in Alaska

The Department of Psychology at the University of Alaska Anchorage (UAA) is pleased to offer a Multicultural Postdoctoral Fellowship beginning in August 2018.

UAA – with community campuses in Mat-Su, Kenai, Kodiak, and Prince William Sound – is located on the traditional homelands of the Dena'ina and Ahtna Athabascan, Alutiiq/Sugpiaq, and Eyak peoples. Furthermore, a rapidly increasing number of culturally diverse peoples from all over the world also call Anchorage home. To better reflect this diversity and better serve our communities, we seek a culturally and academically diverse postdoctoral fellow with an emerging or established interest in working with indigenous/American Indian/Alaska Native communities or other marginalized groups. The postdoctoral fellow may be involved in the department's undergraduate, masters, and PhD programs, depending on the fellow's career goals. The successful candidate will teach one course per semester in the first year, with the teaching load potentially increasing in subsequent years based on individual goals. Psychology faculty will provide mentorship in peer-reviewed publications, conference and community presentations, applications for external funding, and/or clinical service provision. Psychology faculty will also provide mentorship in opportunities to engage with UAA and the greater Anchorage and Alaska communities.

More info here: <http://careers.alaska.edu/cw/en-us/job/508981/multicultural-postdoctoral-fellow-department-of-psychology>

Direct questions about the position to the chair of the search committee, Dr. Vivian Gonzalez (vmgonzalez@alaska.edu).